There were walks, and orchards, and arbors, and the whole bore such a scene of general peacefulness and repose that it was no wonder the wild bucktails were charmed with the prospect, and anxious to penetrate into a spot which gave such promise of tractable soldier. They came from the stepping-off place—the wilderness of Pennsylvania—McKean, Potter, Forest and Tiogo counties—and they obtained their name, which clung to them during the entire war, through a fancy of Col. Kane, brother of the Arctic explorer, who became their commander. He recruited the regiment in the early days of 1851, (beginning on the day of the arrival of the news of the fall of Sumpter) from the backwoodsmen, who were famous marksmen. They were all deer hunters, and as a designation each man was furnished with the tail of a buck, by Col. Kane, and when they marched from Camp Curtin with the bucktails in a heir caps, it was a novel sight. Col. Charles K. Biddell, of Philadelphia, was made the Col., and Col. Kane the Lieutenant Colonel of the regiment both mea noted for their short, attenuating forms. Neither was scarcely more than five feet high, and their combined weight was less than two hundred and twenty pounds.

It may readily be guessed that these soldiers had little respect for Virginia aristocracy, and the tent poles had got hardly settled in the ground before a noted rider—well, Smith—shouldered his deer-killer and started out on a little expedition. He was a sergeant, and of immense size, and went by the name of "The Big Setgeant," He made a straight march for the old Virginian's masor. Now, the old gentleman had Instantly there came running from the house, in a high state of excitement the old Virginian, and when he saw that his pet grow had been killed his rage knew no bounds. He rushed for the Sergeant's gun, and, swearing that he wouldn't have given the crow for the whole Yankee army, vowed that he would blow the soldier's brains out. With this he brought the piece to a coek and glanced along the barrel. The Sergeaut begged for his life, and the Virginian swore he would take it.

The Virginian finally thought of a compromise, and with a 150k half between amazement and rage, told the Sergeaut that he must eat that rawcrow. In vain the other protested, the Virginian insisted on the price of his adversary's life. So the Sergeant pulled off the feathers and began to gag and leat.

Whether this story has any bearing upon the practice of eating crow or not. I cannot pretend to say, but I have little doubt that the pet crow of the old Virginian was quite as palatable to him as Greeley is to some of those who are compelled to swallow him.

Paper-making among the Japanese has reached a degree of art unequalled probably by any people in the world. According to their own account they wrote on sifk, faced with linen, and also on thin wood shavings till near the end of the third century of our era. At that time paper was first imported from Corea, and, superseding the homemade fabric, monopolized the market for more than three hundred years, when the bark of the paper mulnerry when the street comers with his Hoodium comrades of an afternoon; starcs in brazen vulgarity at honest women, and insults with rude gesture doves as they flutter by. From this and from thees and shrubs having fibrous bark the Japanese manufacture, it is said, no less than two hundred and sixty three kluds of paper, while they have several plants from the roots or seed or sap of which they extract a superior sizing for the surface of the sheet. And now from paper, we are told, that they make pocket handkerchiefs, water-proof overcoats, pails, kettles and even saucepans which are safely used over charcoat fires. Of that we would call writing paper they have an immense number of styles, some for deeds and public documents, some for deeds and public documents, some for letters, some for notes, and four distinct kinds to be used only for poetry and songs. There are also kinds for umbrellas, hats, lanterns, candlewick and dressing dolls; and special kinds used only as wrappings for the various styles of religious, social or civic gifts.

Some one suggests that such suits be printed with the latest intelligence from every quarter of the globe, so that every man may be his own newspaper, or with the cheap literature of the day, so that he that runs may read, or that the suits be printed on both sides, so that they can be turned the second day, and a person thus wear a serial through the week, "to be continued" being stamped on the coat-tail, while if on Sunday a body would wear very good clothes they might be printed all over with sermons or striking religious exhortations.
